INTRODUCTION

The Landolts filed a short motion to disqualify Gordon DePaoli and his firm citing the simple proposition that any lawyer who is disabled from giving one client information because he is bound by his duty to another client to keep it secret, has an irremediable conflict of interest. The Landolts, in their moving papers, point out that the Order Governing Mediation Process ("Order") prohibits, at paragraph 3 thereof, any party to the mediation process from disclosing any confidential information arising from the mediation and that Mr. DePaoli, in addition to representing a party to that mediation, represents a number of party stakeholders who are not. After giving us an exhaustive, but entirely irrelevant, history of the Walker River Irrigation District ("WRID"), setting forth the structure of the allocation of water resources, discussing the progress of the instant litigation and presenting a short primer on water law WRID, at page 21 of its opposition, finally gets to the point. It does not, however, address the central issues raised by the Landolt's motion. Its object appears, rather, to so complicate the discussion that the point of the motion is lost.

MEDIATION CONFIDENTIALITY

WRID begins its opposition with an interesting parsing of passages designed to leave the inaccurate impression that the non-DePaoli parties are not disadvantaged by their not being represented by DePaoli. It starts by quoting, at length, from the confidentiality section at paragraph 3 of the Order, (Opposition, p.18), portentously underlining a reference, contained in paragraph 8.3.1 of the Order, to an exception to the confidentiality mandate, as if the reference were something that gave lie to the Landolt's claim that they are prevented from knowing what DePaoli represented clients will know.

1           The confidentiality section, paragraph 3, is interesting in its structure. It starts out with 2 the unambiguous statement that everything that happens in the mediation is confidential. That, 3 in itself, might have been enough, but the section goes on to emphasize the point by stating that 4 nothing that occurs in the mediation is discoverable at law. And then, as if all of that were not 5 clear enough, it hammers the point home by telling us that not only is none of the mediation 6 material discoverable, one cannot go through the back door with a Freedom of Information Act 7 request to obtain it. Just when you think they might have considered the point made, the 8 paragraph goes on to say that mediation participants are protected from being forced to disclose 9 information from the mediation to any other person or party to the action. And, finally, it says 10 that even if you find out the confidential information, you can't use it at trial because it is 11 inadmissible. Whew!
12

14           Ah, but then comes the coup de grace: the portentous 8.3.1 exceptions! These are apparently 15 cited by WRID to show that paragraph 3 really did not mean what it (repeatedly) said and the 16 mediation information is not really all that confidential since it can, in fact, be disclosed. And 17 what is capable of disclosure under 8.3.1? Information that is generally available; previously 18 disclosed information and information that is previously known. That is to say, any information 19 that does not arise from the mediation process. That means, of course, that any information that 20 does arise from the mediation process is not available to anyone who did not participate in the 21 mediation. But it is, in fact, available to anyone who did engage in the mediation. And 22 ETHICALLY it must be disclosed to people who did not engage in the mediation by any lawyer 23 who did because he has the absolute duty to disclose to his clients anything he might have 24 learned that could be of interest or assistance to them. (Nevada Supreme Court Rule 154(1), "A 25 lawyer shall keep a client reasonably informed about the status of a matter..." and Rule 154 (2), 26
27
28

1        "A lawyer shall explain a matter to the extent reasonably necessary to permit the client to make 2 informed decisions regarding the representation.")

3              The exceptions in 8.3.1 closely track those found in confidentiality agreements providing 4 for the protection of intellectual property when one party is going to disclose secrets to another.
5 Under intellectual property law, intellectual property belonging to a person or company can be 6 protected from disclosure or use except insofar as it is already in the public domain, has 7 previously been learned from another source or has been previously disclosed without a 8 confidentiality agreement. The purpose is to ensure that no secret that can actually be maintained 9 as a secret will be disclosed, recognizing that some things might already be known and, hence, 10 may be disclosed. But anything that is capable of protection is protected by such agreements.
11 So it is here. Mediation participants can disclose anything that is already known, but may not 12 disclose anything that is not. That means that the exceptions in 8.3.1 are meaningless since they 13 refer only to things which are already not confidential.

14              WRID goes on to assert that, actually, there is an additional exception that allows for the 15 disclosure of information to individual stakeholders through WRID, and it cites paragraph 8.3.4 16 as the authority for this proposition. Let's start with observing that if 8.3.4 were as broad as 17 WRID is attempting to suggest, there would be nothing confidential that cannot be disclosed. But 18 that is clearly untrue. If it were true, why would the mediating parties be struggling so mightily 19 to maintain the confidentiality clause? Simply stated, 8.3.4 is just not that broad. It allows 20 WRID to reveal three things and three things only: (1) when the next meeting is; (2) what 21 proposals are being considered; and (3) what work assignments have been handed out to the 22 participants. That's not much information. And it certainly is not nearly as broad as WRID 23 would have this court believe.

25
26
27
28

1           So, what impression has WRID tried to conjure here? First, that there are broad 2 exceptions to the confidentiality prohibition and, second, that WRID can broadly disclose 3 mediation information to its constituents. The impression is a false one. Neither impression, as 4 we have seen, is true. The 8.3.1 exceptions are not exceptions at all but an accurate statement of 5 law which is that anything that is already known cannot be made confidential by a confidentiality 6 agreement. And the 8.3.4 exceptions are so narrow that nothing of substance can be disclosed 7 under their terms. So, the question is: why has WRID labored so hard to convince this court that 8 that the Paragraph 3 confidentiality section is not so onerous? Because if it can convince this 9 court that pretty much anything arising from the mediation can be disclosed, it stands a 10 reasonable chance of convincing it that maybe Mr. DePaoli does not have a conflict. But 11 Paragraph 3 itself gives lie to that.
12

13           Having failed, by this time, to show that information arising from the mediation can be 14 disclosed to non-mediating parties, WRID then engages in some slight of hand.
15

16           Well, they tell us, if no one can use the information at trial because it is not admissible, 17 then everyone is on an equal footing anyway. Everyone is equally disadvantaged. But that is not 18 so. Just because information is not admissible does not mean that it is not of interest and would 19 not be helpful to a litigant. Many things in litigation are confidential. Attorney work product, 20 for example. But would anyone seriously deny that knowing an opposing lawyer's work 21 product, even though inadmissible, would be helpful to the other side? Would anyone seriously 22 deny that that knowledge would represent a tremendous advantage to the opposing party? Of 23 course not. The notion is absurd on its face. The reason attorney work product is protected from 24 discovery is just because it would give the opposing party a tremendous and unfair advantage 25 over his adversary.
26

27
28

1           And that is why the mere fact that the confidential information generated by the 2 mediation process is inadmissible at trial does not, in any way, vitiate the tremendous advantage 3 it gives those having it over those who do not. And how would an opposing party know to object 4 to it when it is introduced anyway? How could he tell if it arose from the mediation or was just 5 the result of good lawyering? He wouldn't. And that is why the fact of its inadmissibility is 6 completely irrelevant.

7           And what of Mr. DePaoli in this situation? He will inevitably learn information he may 8 not disclose to his non-mediating clients. If that were not anticipated, the mediating parties 9 would not have gone to the trouble of including the confidentiality section in the Order. And 10 when he learns that information, what is his duty to those of his clients who are not participating 11 in the mediation? His duty is to disclose that information to them (Nevada Supreme Court 12 Rule 154(1) and (2)) If he does not, he violates his duty to them under Nevada Supreme Court 13 Rule 157(2) ("A lawyer shall not represent a client if the representation of that client may be 14 materially limited by the lawyer's responsibilities to another client..."). But if he does disclose it 15 to them, he violates this court's order and his duty to his mediating client. It would be difficult 16 to imagine a greater or more obvious conflict of interest. And that is what this Court held in 17 Duval Ranching Company v. Glickman, 930 F.Supp. 469,473 (1996). ("For example, an 18 impermissible conflict of interest may arise because of a disagreement as to litigation strategy, or 19 the fact that there may be substantially different possibilities for settlement among the clients and 20 the third party...This impairment of a lawyer's loyalty may constitute a violation of the client's 21 absolute right to her lawyer's undivided loyalty.")

22           It is worth noting, at this point, that although this Court is a very powerful one, it does not 23 have the power to prevent a lawyer from carrying out his ethical duties to his client. The Order

25
26
27
28

1 does just that if a lawyer representing a party to the mediation also represents a party who is not.
2 It prevents a lawyer representing both categories of party from carrying out his duty of loyalty to 3 one of them on pain of violating this Court's order.

4           And what of Mr. DePaoli's non-mediating clients? They cannot, under the Order, even 5 be told what Mr. DePaoli knows that might be helpful to them. They cannot even be given the 6 tools through which they can determine their own best interests. They must trust that their 7 lawyer is going to tell them everything he is bound by the Supreme Court Rules to tell them. But, 8 of course, they have no way of knowing. They must take it completely on faith. That, itself, is 9 an insurmountable conflict for Mr. DePaoli. It becomes even more insurmountable when the 10 new Nevada Supreme Court ethics rules take effect on May 1st. According to the State Bar of 11 Nevada website, the new rules will utilize the nomenclature of the ABA model rules and will 12 also require that consent be "informed" consent. How can "informed" consent be obtained from 13 ignorance of that to which the client is consenting? It is manifestly oxymoronic. And if Mr.
14 DePaoli withholds information from his non-mediating clients so as to comply with the Order
15 and protect WRID's confidence, he violates his ethical duty to his non-mediating clients. Zador 16 Corporation v. Kwan (1995) 31 Cal.App.4th 1285, 1293 ("The relation between attorney and 17 client is a fiduciary relation of the very highest character, and binds the attorney to most 18 conscientious fidelity – uberrima fides....Because of this fiduciary relationship, it is improper for 19 an attorney to assume a position which is inconsistent with the interests of present or former 20 clients.") In the instant case, Mr. DePaoli has a dual conflict. He cannot tell WRID anything his 21 non-mediating clients tell him that might be of interest to it and cannot tell them anything arising 22 from the mediation.

23

1           And what of Mr. DePaoli's mediating client? He cannot tell that client anything he learns 2 in confidence from any non-mediating client even if it could very much strengthen WRID's hand 3 in the mediation.

4           And what of the Landolts in this situation? Their situation is the worst of all. Mr.
5 DePaoli has no duty to them. They do not need faith, of course, because they know Mr. DePaoli 6 cannot tell them anything and that he has no ethical duty to do so. But they must assume that 7 Mr. DePaoli will carry out his ethical duty to his non-mediating clients and will use, for their 8 benefit, every bit of confidential information he learned in the mediation process. They must 9 assume that he will disclose to his non-mediating clients every bit of confidential information he 10 learned in the mediation process because that is his duty. And whether or not that information is 11 admissible, it certainly can be presumed that it will be helpful in advancing the interests of the 12 mediating parties and those non-mediating parties who are represented by Gordon DePaoli.
13

14           WRID goes on to make the entirely irrelevant statement that the mediating parties have 15 not changed and "It is the District which is the Mediating Party, not its counsel" (Opposition, 16 p.19) as if "the District", a fictitious inchoate entity, is the only one that will receive confidential 17 information from the mediation, not its lawyer. Nothing could be more absurd. The district is 18 represented by its lawyer. It participates in the mediation through its lawyer. The confidential 19 mediation information it learns, it learns from its lawyer. And we do not know by what magical 20 power, Mr. DePaoli can learn confidential information and remember it only when he is talking 21 to someone entitled to have it. No, Mr. DePaoli knows what he knows, irrespective of who he is, 22 at the moment, representing. And he is bound to use it in behalf of any person or entity he is 23 representing who could be helped by that information.

26

27

28

Finally, Nevada Supreme Court Rule 157 (2) requires that a lawyer representing multiple parties in any litigation obtain the consent of each, preferably in writing, after consultation which "shall include explanation of the implications of the common representation and the advantages and risks involved." There is no evidence before this Court that that has done this in this instance. If for no other reason, the instant motion should be granted on this basis.

Standing

It is odd that WRID has raised the issue of standing, particularly by reference to Colyer v. Smith 50 F.Supp. 966 (1999). After going to some effort to convince this court that Colyer proceeds from the assumption that no one who is not either a client or former client of an attorney with an obvious conflict has standing to challenge his representation in a particular case, WRID discloses that the Colyer court provides an exception to the general rule. That exception is "where the ethical breach so infects the litigation that it impacts the moving party's interest in a just and lawful determination of her claims". (Id at 971-972) ("Where the ethical breach is so severe that it 'obstructs the orderly administration of justice' the party who finds his claims obstructed has standing.") It is just so here.

Mr. DePaoli has as clear and obvious a conflict as can be imagined. That is an ethical breach. (Nevada Supreme Court Rules 157 (1) and (2)) By participating, for some clients, in a mediation from which others of his clients are excluded, he will learn confidential information that he is prevented, by the Order, from disclosing to his non-mediating clients. That includes those of his clients who are not participating in the mediation. But Nevada Supreme Court Rule 154(1) and (2) requires that he disclose to clients under his representation all information that might be of interest or of help to them in the litigation. If he fails to do so, he violates Rule 154. If he does do so, he violates this court's order. It is an untenable position for him and

1 presents him with a conflict as plain as ever existed. Conflicts are ethical violations. (Nevada 2 Supreme Court Rules 157 (1) and (2)) Failing to make disclosures one is bound to make are 3 ethical violations as violations of the duty of loyalty. That demonstrates the first prong of the 4 Colyer test.

5                 Once Mr. DePaoli learns the many confidential matters to which he will be (or has been) 6 exposed in the mediation process, he will not be able to unlearn them. They will be there, the 7 fruits of his untenable conflict, as he prepares his representation of his mediating and non-8 mediating clients, alike. And it will affect what he does and how he prepares his case. At the 9 same time, those representing the non-mediating, non-DePaoli parties will be left with preparing 10 without the benefit of all that knowledge Mr. DePaoli has learned as a result of his participation 11 in the mediation. His multiple ethical breaches will, in fact, so infect the litigation process, that 12 it will presumptively adversely impact the Landolt's interest in a just and lawful determination of 13 their rights in this litigation. There is no way to escape it. And that satisfies the second prong of 14 the Colyer case for establishing standing. The Landolt's clearly have standing to bring the 15 instant motion.

16                 While WRID suggests that claims of conflict are merely speculative, they are much, 17 much more. WRID claims that we do not know what information Mr. DePaoli will learn; 18 whether it is confidential; what impact it might have on the conduct and preparation of a defense 19 and whether or not he will disclose it to his non-mediating clients. Of course, we don't. It's 20 confidential! And that is the very point. We don't know and we cannot know because of the 21 confidentiality section of the Order; the Order that gives Mr. DePaoli his conflict. We don't 22 know how it will impact us; we can't know whether it would be helpful in framing a defense; we 23 don't know if he will disclose it to his non-mediating clients. Even his non-mediating clients 24
25
26
27
28

1 cannot know, with confidence, whether or not he is telling them everything they might need to 2 know in framing their defense. But none of that makes the Landolt's complaint herein 3 speculative. There is nothing speculative about the conflict itself. And it must be presumed that 4 Mr. DePaoli will be exposed to confidential information, else why have a confidentiality clause?
5 We do know that it will be information bearing on the rights and duties of the various parties 6 impacting the adjudication of water rights in the instant action. And we do know that Mr.
7 DePaoli has a duty to disclose any information he has that would be helpful to any client. And 8 we do know that Mr. DePaoli's duty to his mediating client is to keep such information from his 9 other clients, who have a right to have it. So, there is nothing speculative about the conflict 10 unless it is claimed that there will be no confidential information exchanged during the mediation 11 process. And if that is true, then we can dispense with the confidentiality clause and release all 12 information arising from the mediation to all parties. But that has not yet been done.
13

14       Inasmuch as the Landolts' complaint herein is being dismissed as speculative, though, 15 let's make it concrete by speculating a bit. Suppose the mediating parties learn that a settlement 16 is imminent and that it will mean a loss of some of their existing water rights. Obviously, that 17 would mean a decline in the value of those existing water rights. Armed with such inside 18 information, the mediating parties could sell off their water rights before the decline. Further, 19 without disclosing the confidential information, Mr. DePaoli could alert his non-mediating 20 clients to sell off water rights before they take a tumble in the marketplace. There are no Wall 21 Street style insider information laws applicable to the sale of water rights. Or we can "speculate" 22 as Judge Reed did in Duval Ranching, supra, when he wrote: "...an impermissible conflict may 23 arise because of a disagreement in strategy or the fact that there may be substantially different 24 possibilities for settlement among the clients and a third party..." Id, at 473. One can speculate.
25
26
27
28

1 like this ad infinitum to illustrate the potential inequity presented by the confidentiality clause 2 and this conflict of interest problem.

3 There are solutions to this problem, among which are getting rid of the confidentiality 4 clause or creating some body to represent the diverse interests of stakeholders and giving them a 5 seat at the mediation table. But those do not exist at this point – in fact, they have been actively 6 resisted - and even if they did exist, they would not vitiate Mr. DePaoli's current severe conflict.
7

8 At page 21 of its brief, WRID attempts to minimize the impact of the confidentiality 9 clause on the non-DePaoli parties by indicating that whatever defenses exist to the claims of the 10 government and the Tribe, they are shared equally. It is all well and good for the repository of 11 confidential information to reassure us all that it does not make any difference to us. It is quite 12 another thing to be the party who lacks that information to have confidence it is true. We 13 suppose it would be theoretically possible to convince someone that knowledge of an opponent's 14 confidential attorney work product in preparation for trial would be of no earthly use to the other 15 side, but it is not likely. The problem with the situation as it exists in this case, is that we do not 16 know what we do not know and, thus, cannot gauge how helpful or unhelpful it would be. That 17 is the crux of the conflict as it affects the Landolts. Who knows what information will be 18 generated by the mediation that could be helpful to some, but not all, of the non-mediating 19 parties? The problem is we do not know.
20

22 WIRD goes on to say that if an equitable defense exists, it exists for all parties.
23 (Opposition, p.21) Well and good. But if we do not know of it, we might not timely assert it. If 24 we do not have knowledge of the facts necessary to prove it, we might not be able to timely 25 generate the evidence necessary to demonstrate it at trial. Unless Mr. DePaoli is going to take 26 responsibility for proving every stakeholder's equitable defenses, his advance knowledge of 27
28

1 them or information arising from the mediation that would tend to support them, would put the 2 non-DePaoli stakeholders at a tremendous disadvantage.

3 WRID next contends (Opposition, p.21) that the court's decision recognizing a new water 4 right for the Tribe will impact all other users equally. But that is not true. There are several 5 categories of users who may be treated differently, such as agricultural users, government users 6 and individual well owners. When the mediation is between the Tribe and the various 7 governments, it is pretty clear that the governments will protect their own interests before those 8 of individual stakeholders and information might arise in the mediation that impairs the 9 governments' claims to the benefit of individual stakeholders. So it is not true that a decision 10 granting the Tribe the relief it seeks will necessarily impact all parties equally. And we do not 11 know what information will be exchanged during the mediation process that could help those 12 individual stakeholders in framing their defense.

13 There is also, of course, the matter of settlement or capitulation which may proceed on a 14 more individual basis. A greater understanding of facts, background and rights might impact the 15 decision an individual stakeholder might make with respect to his willingness to maintain a 16 position in the instant litigation. But if his lawyer is not willing to tell him the facts that could be 17 critical in helping him make that decision, he will not have the tools to make a sound one.

18 We are operating in a vacuum. First, as pointed out in WRID's opposition, we do not yet 19 know what threshold issues will need to be determined by the court. Second, we have no idea, 20 therefore, what issues the court will have to decide to finally decide the Tribe's claims. Because 21 we do not know what the threshold issues or the final issues will be, we do not know what 22 defenses are available to us. Because we do not know any of these things, we do not know what 23 evidence we will need to sustain any such defense. Finally, because we do not know what

25

26

27

28

1 evidence we will need to defend ourselves, we cannot gauge whether or not information that will 2 be developed during the mediation process will assist us. That is the problem.
3

4 But what we do know is that confidential information will be generated by the mediation 5 and that Mr. DePaoli will know it and be unable to share it with his non-mediating clients. The 6 nature and extent of that information is unknown to us, at this point, but we must assume it will 7 exist since the mediating parties took such pains to included a remarkable paragraph that, in six 8 sentences said over and over again that such information was to be held confidential and 9 unavailable to any but the mediating parties. Unless we know what that information is, we 10 cannot know whether or not if would be helpful in framing a defense for the non-mediating 11 parties, but we cannot just take it on faith that it will not.
12

13 On the issue of the Landolts' standing to move for the disqualification of Mr. DePaoli 14 and his firm, then, the case cited by WRID is very clear. If an ethical violation occurs that has 15 the effect of impairing a party's right to a fair trial, that party has standing to bring a motion to 16 disqualify.
17

18 So, what do we know? (1) Mr. DePaoli represents parties to the mediation. (2) Those 19 parties and Mr. DePaoli will be exposed to information that could be of assistance to other 20 parties to the litigation. (3) Mr. DePaoli is prohibited by this court's order from disclosing any 21 of that information to any parties to the litigation who are not, also, participating in the 22 mediation. (4) Mr. DePaoli also represents parties to the litigation who are not participating in 23 the mediation. (5) Mr. DePaoli has a duty to disclose to those parties anything he learns from 24 any source that would be helpful to them in the litigation or in which they might be interested.
25 (6) Therefore, Mr. DePaoli is in an unethical conflict. (7) Inasmuch as the mediation has been 26 going on for more than two long years, it defies logic to believe that some such information has 27

not already been generated by the mediation. Otherwise, surely, the mediating parties would not have gone to such lengths not only to keep information regarding the mediation from the other litigants, but they would also not so mightily have resisted the inclusion of other parties in the process. Surely, they would not have been secretive even with this court, when it inquired about the mediation at the status conference on October 1, 2004 (8) Mr. DePaoli's unethical conflict has an adverse impact on those litigants who are not represented by him because they will not have the benefit of the knowledge he gains from the mediation while those he represents will or will at least be warned off of unwise decisions based on his insider information. (9) That will clearly result in a disadvantage to the non-DePaoli litigants in participating in and preparing for trial. Under the Colyer case, then, WRID's own authority, Mr. DePaoli must be disqualified and the Landolt have standing to move for that disqualification.

MR. DEPAOLI MUST BE DISQUALIFIED

In opposing the instant motion, WRID suggests that the court must engage in some sort of balancing between parties' choice of lawyers and a conflict. (Opposition, p.22) The fact is that if a court finds that a conflict exists that threatens an injustice, it must disqualify the offending lawyer. Tessier v. Plastic Surgery Specialists, Inc. 731 F.Supp. 724 (1990) ("Chief among the reasons for avoiding conflicts of interest is the preservation of the public's confidence in the integrity of lawyers and the judicial system. To allow a conflict to remain unaddressed until an affected party complains about the quality of justice he or she has received is to betray the public trust granted to the bar as a self-regulating organization.") Id. at 729. In disqualifying counsel in that case, the court held that any lawyer involved in the litigation has standing to bring the motion for the purpose of protecting the integrity of the process. The right to retain counsel

1 of a client's choosing, it wrote, is secondary in importance to the court's maintaining the highest 2 ethical standards and to preserve trust in the integrity of the bar. Id.

3 WRID goes on to imply that the instant motion presents only a theoretical conflict.
4 However, the conflict, as we have pointed out hereinabove, is as clear, existing and real as can be 5 possible. Mr. DePaoli will learn facts that would be of interest to his non-mediating clients. In 6 order to carry out his duty of confidentiality to his mediating clients, he cannot reveal those facts 7 to his non-mediating clients. In order to carry out his duty of loyalty to his non-mediating 8 clients, he must reveal those facts to them. His conflict is direct: he has a duty to one client in 9 this case that conflicts with his duty to another client in this case. He cannot disclose to one what 10 he learns in representing the other. It is a conflict, plain and simple. It is not theoretical. It is 11 not a mere "possibility".
12

13 WRID indicates that Nevada has a two-pronged test for evaluating disqualification 14 motions. The first prong is that there is "at least a reasonable possibility" that an impropriety did 15 occur. Not a probability. Not a certainty. A possibility. That prong is satisfied by the fact that 16 the mediating parties have engaged in the process for more than two years and vigorously 17 defended their right to keep confidential information derived through that process. If the 18 information they seek to keep confidential would not be of interest to the non-mediating parties, 19 why keep it confidential? The right to keep some information confidential exists so that 20 someone with a right to certain information that could give those from whom the information is 21 withheld an unfair advantage, can keep it from them. If it would give them no advantage, what 22 basis is there to keep it from them? Because we are not privy to the confidential information, we 23 cannot tell this court what it is. But we must assume that it has arisen and that it is something in 24 which the non-mediating parties would be interested. With that assumption in mind, we know 25
26
27
28

1 that either Mr. DePaoli disclosed it to his non-mediating clients, in which case, he violated his 2 duty to his mediating clients, or he did not reveal it to his non-mediating clients, in which case he 3 has violated his duty to his non-mediating clients. In either event, there is at least a reasonable 4 possibility that an impropriety has occurred. Keep in mind, that the rule does not require that we 5 demonstrate that an impropriety did, in fact, occur. Nor does it require that we prove that there is 6 a probability that it occurred. We must show only that there is a reasonable possibility that it 7 occurred, and no fair-minded person can deny we have done that.

8 9       The second prong is that there is a likelihood of public obloquy that outweighs the 10 parties' desire to be represented by a particular lawyer. There is more than a likelihood of public 11 obloquy in this instance. There is every possibility that whatever this court ultimately does can 12 be undone if a real conflict is shown. This case will resolve an important matter of urgent public 13 concern. Its failure as a result of a conflict would be a major public issue. The public would 14 rightly be critical if the process were to fail when the means of protecting it are so simple. There 15 is no reason to invite criticism when the problem can be solved early in the process.

16
17       WRID contends that Mr. DePaoli's representation of it in this case is not "directly 18 adverse" to his other clients. But WRID has too restrictive a definition of what is "directly 19 adverse". It does not necessarily mean that the parties have to be on opposite sides of a case, 20 only that an interest of one party is preferred over the interest of another. In this case, WRID's 21 interest is in maintaining confidentiality and Mr. DePaoli's non-mediating clients' interest is in 22 having access to the confidential information derived from the mediation. Their interests are 23 directly adverse in this regard. As WRID has pointed out in its opposition, "Direct adversity 24 exists when an attorney acts as an advocate for one client against another client." (Opposition, p.
25 24) That has occurred in this case. Either Mr. DePaoli has disclosed confidential information to 26
27
28

1 those of his clients unentitled to have it, or he has not. Either way, he has acted for one client's 2 interests over another's.

3 Perhaps the conflict could be overcome with a knowing and intelligent waiver of the 4 conflict, as WRID has suggested, but Mr. DePaoli's non-mediating clients cannot give one 5 because they cannot have disclosed to them the information that would make their waiver 6 "knowing" and, thus, "intelligent". So, contrary to WRID's hopeful idea, the problem cannot be 7 solved by agreement. And, as pointed out hereinbefore, it has not been so solved.

8

9 Water Law Argument

10 WRID argues that water law cases are different and that there is, therefore, no conflict 11 since whatever the court's ultimate decision, all stakeholders will be affected equally. That 12 position misapprehends several things. The first, and most obvious, is the fact that it is not the 13 ultimate interests that are necessarily in conflict, but the fact that Mr. DePaoli must withhold 14 from some of his clients information that he must give to other of his clients. Whether their 15 interests will ultimately conflict on the end merits of the case, we cannot, yet, know. And it is 16 likely that we will never be able to know because we will never be exposed to the confidential 17 information generated by the mediation that we are prohibited from learning. We do not know if 18 that information would be helpful, because we do not know what it is. We must assume it would 19 be helpful, otherwise, there would be no reason to keep it secret. But what we do know is that 20 Mr. DePaoli must prefer some clients over other clients. And that is the conflict.

22 In addition, there are different categories of individual stakeholders and it is not true that 23 a decision in favor of the Tribe will necessarily affect all individual stakeholders equally. The 24 court could reapportion water resources as between all stakeholders by formulas that have not yet 25 been proposed. Since the Tribe's immediate effort is to modify the 1936 Decree, it is certainly 26

1 possible that such a modification could involve a complete reallocation of resources and changes 2 for categories of users to the detriment of others. While it has not yet been discussed, once the 3 Decree is opened up for change, there seems no principled reason to exclude the possibility that 4 anything in it might be fair game. So, it does not matter that the instant case involves water law.
5 The Court can fashion a decision that will favor some and not others so its decision might not 6 apply to all equally.

7

8                   Mr. DePaoli's Representation WRID Impacts His Responsibilities to His Individual 9 Clients.

10                  Finally, the best argument in favor of disqualification is contained in the final section of 11 the opposition brief. In it, WRID points out that paragraph 2 of Nevada Supreme Court Rule 157 12 prohibits a lawyer from a representation if it will materially limit that lawyer's responsibilities to 13 another client. WRID goes on to posit that "Loyalty to a client is also impaired when a lawyer 14 cannot consider, recommend or carry out an appropriate course of action for the client because of 15 the lawyer's other responsibilities or interest." It is just so, in this case. Mr. DePaoli cannot 16 disclose to his individual clients what he is bound to disclose to WRID even though he has a duty 17 to do so. He has a clear conflict and must be disqualified.

18

19                   CONCLUSION

20                  The Landolt's motion is profoundly simple. WRID's opposition appears designed to so 21 complicate the matter that the simplicity of the issue will be obscured. But it never actually 22 addresses the conflict the Landolts have raised. Mr. DePaoli is engaged in the representation of a 23 client whose secrets he is bound to keep. He is engaged in a mediation process that has resulted 24 or will result in his receipt of information that might be of interest to his non-mediating clients.
25 He is bound by State Supreme Court Rule to disclose all such information to his non-mediating 26

27

28

1 clients and prohibited from doing so by this court's order. He is in an untenable conflict. If this 2 process is to succeed, there must be no possible suggestion that it is in any way tainted. Court 3 processes, no less than lawyers, must avoid the appearance of impropriety. Mr. DePaoli and his 4 firm should be disqualified from further representation of any of the parties hereto.
